"Judge Tree came to Chicago from Georgetown in the District of Columbia. Col. Berret, who is to have charge of the inauguration parade, says he once supplyed Mr. Tree as his clerk. She had an ample fortune, and he is worth about six millions of long time to early thin tit takes him a good while to bring out what he means. He attracted no particular attention except as a man of cultivation and probity until Mr. Cleveland sent him to Beiglum and subsequently to Russia. He married his only son to the daughter of Marshall Field, our leading merchant, who is thought to be worth $40,000,000. He can certainly give each of his children $10,000,000. Judge Tree made the mistake sometimes made in America of sending his son to an English University. Excavations are made on sheltered hillsides, which are covered with wooden framework and brush, and upon these a covering of earth is spread. Many of these excavated dwelling places are only six or seven feet wide, cylindrical in form, and lined with bark. Nothing is known of the origin of these people, but they first became acquainted with the whites about the beginning of the present century.
